The Emperor Napoleon and the English Sailer Boy.

During the great struggle between France, led by Napoleon, and the allied forces of Europe in the early part of the nineteenth century many prisoners were taken on each side, and many a weary month they passed sighing for a sight of their own native shores again. The British held a large number of the French immured at Dartmoor. They on their part kept many of the British at Boulogne and Calais, almost within sight of the white cliffs of

An English sailor lad who had been captured among many others at the same time was detected one day by his French warders making a basket and covering it over with pieces of old sailcloth. Unable to nderstand this conduct, but still knowing it to be contrary to the prison regulations, the authorities brought the boy before Napoleon. In answer to the great emperor's questions as to what he was making the basket for the young sailor frankly said that he hoped-one day to be able to effect his escape from the French prison in which he was then confined and that, so great was his longing to see his mother again, he had made up his mind to set himself affoat in this sail covered basket on the vague chance that it might perhaps drift him over to the opposite side of the channel and enable him to once more set foot on English soil. Napoleon, who, like all truly great men, knew how to be generous to a helpless foe, at once ordered him to be liberated and sent him home by the next ship sailing for England .- Chatterbox.

A Star Operator at Fourteen.

Jamie Bosworth, Alton, Ill., now but fourteen years of age, has become an expert telegrapher. His skill is said to be marvelous. There are many telegraphers who have worked for more years than he i old who have not his ability. He uses a typewriter in his work exclusively. He has been on the pay rol of the Postal Telegraph company for three years, having been selected as an assistant at the Alton (Ill. office when he was eleven years old. He has now been assigned to duty as an operator in the general office of the company at St. Louis. He learned his dots and dashes while playing around the office of the telegraph company at Alton, where his mother was local manager. Jamie's brother Leo, who is now eleven years old, has succeeded him as his mother's assistant in the Alton office.—American Boy.

Snowfiakes.

Of what are little anowfiakes made
That tumble from on high?
They twist and turn about up there,
So happy in the sky.
I wish that we could get to them;
"Twould be a splendid plan
To join their games of "hide and seek"
And "catch me if you can."

I can't think how they get up there, But this much well I know: It is for little children's sakes They tumble down below. We love them so and welcome them With joy and with delight, And dearly do they love us, too, The little snowflakes white.

For when we hold our faces up

Toward the sky-like this— The little snowflakes always leave Upon our cheeks a kiss. Ah, now I've guessed what snowflakes arel

The mystery is cleared; They're just the kisses thrown to us Through Santa Claus' beard! —Constance M. Lowe.
